Pranks for everything

May I say it's a weirder April Fools than usual when Joey Skaggs is not hoaxing and everyone else, apparently, is. it was a bumper crop if not a banner year for techish pranks, as Computerworld noted, with some observers disgusted by the ubiquity of the jokes, others disgusted by excess topicality, and still others, well, just generally disgusted.

The legendary Mr. Skaggs, on the other hand, knows that if you want to draw a crowd, it's smart to go where the people are already gathering. And so Sunday, in addition to his usual parade through the streets of New York -- and do tell me if you've ever attended that spectacular, won't you? -- he launched pranks.com, which will (one hopes) bring us plenty of his insight into culture jamming, media critique, and general reality subversion. (And mayhem. Skaggs on the joy of mayhem is a thing of beauty.) If you think pranks are something pulled by Nigerian scamsters or passed around as endless e-mail forwards, you're in for an eye-opening experience.
