

Celebrity Sperm, a sperm bank specializing in donations from rock superstars, will sponsor an auction of its product, this Saturday for the benefit of the American Rock and Roll Party. A rock band, and several guest celebrity donors will participate in the auction, scheduled to begin at noon, at 120 Waverly Place (near Sixth Avenue).

The American Rock & Roll Party was recently organized with the goal of bringing more boogieing into our everyday life. The term "boogie" means to have fun with music, more specifically, rock and roll music, and the Party is dedicated to the propagation of more rock and roll and more dancing for everyone. Jimmy Carter, the Democratic party candidate for president, and an ardent rock music fan, is expected to endorse the goals of the Rock and Roll Party.

Celebrity Sperm is one of the few sperm banks in the country which does not insist on anonymous donors. They have based their business on the desirability of being artificially inseminated with the sperm of celebrities from all professions. However for the auction, only musicians' sperm will be offered, in honor of the goals of the Rock and Roll Party.

Celebrity Sperm expects a large turnout of women interested in conceiving the child of a rock superstar and those simply interested in conceiving a child without direct contact with a male. Successful bidders will sign disclaimers releasing the donors from any legal obligations in the result of successful conception.
